on the East River, uptown, then changed to downtown, and since then he had been shifted all around, but had always been assigned to posts in open docks. In fact, he made it plain that things had been made as uncomfortable for him as possible.
"Do you regret your refusal to give up your money to the Captain?" asked Mr. Goff.

Reilly shook his head.

The next witness was Augustus A.
Wolf, manager of Maillard's chocolate factory at 114 West Twenty-fifth street.
He was a friend of Mr. Forget and also of Capt. Schmittberger, whom he said he had known ever since he was a patrolman on the force.

"Didn't Capt. Schmittberger go to you not long ago and ask you to use your influence with Mr. Forget not to testify seainst him?" ly shook his head.

sgainst him?"
"Yes, he asked me to speak to Mr.
Forget, who was then abroad, and I promised to find out when he would sail for home and meet him." Had a Premonition.

"What did he say to you?"
"He said that there might be some investigation of his conduct by the Lexew Committee, and that Mr. Forget might be called as a witness, and he asked me as an old friend to do what I could to find out how Mr. Forget felt about the matter."

Mr. Wolf said he met Mr. Forget down the bay, when he arrived on La Touraine, and spoke to him about Capt. Schmittberger's request, and that he had also dropped in at the Hotel Martin afterwards, and renewed the conversation on the subject.

"You did not know that these visits of yours to Mr. Fourget were observed?" asked Mr. Goff.
"No, sir; I never suspected it, but I see that they were."
"Have you seen Capt. Schmittberger recently?"
"No, sir."
"Didn't he call at your office yesterday to see you?"

"Yes, I heard he was there looking for me, but I was away all day and didn't see him."
Mr. Goff tried to get the witness to admit that he had paid money to the police for permission to obstruct the sidewalk in front of the factory, but he denied that he had ever given any money for this purpose.

And Now, Capt. Grant.

And Now, Capt. Grant.

Bernard W. Wolff, a liquor dealer, of $22 Ninth avenue, was the next witness. He testified that he had paid blackmail to Ward Men Logan and Dougherty, of Capt. Grant's precinct, in 1883.

"They began persecuting me and interfering with my business, so I had to do something, or I would have been ruined. I was pretty independent before that, and had never paid anything.

"How much did you pay?"
Twenty dollars a month. Logan used to collect the money. This was in the Bligzard year. Once I had some trouble when I wanted to get my tax reduced. I went to see Capt. Grant about it and told him that I could not afford to pay so much. I had my dues for the month-320-in an envelope which I gave to him, but told him that he would have to make it easier for me after that."

"After talking the matter over, he said he would o so, and after that time I never paid but $10 a month."

"You gave Capt. Grant the money?"

"Yes, I told him it was for Logan, for he usually did the collecting, and he took it. There was no address on the envelope, but that was not necessary; he knew what it was."

Seth B. Robinson, a lawyer of 49 Liberty street, said he was coming down on the "L" road on the morning of Sept. I2, when a policeman in an advanced stage of intoxication sot in at Twent2-sighth street. He got out at Twent2-sighth street. He at first refused to do suything, but afterwards went into the basement and arrested the policeman, whose name was Callahan, and belonged to the Leonard street station. Surgeon Cook was summoned to see if Callahan was drunk, and naily the officer wasta ken to efferson Market Police Court, where he was discharged. The witness said that since that time of three attempts had been made by a gang in the vicinity to rob him, and that the police there would not arrest any of them.

Hochstim's Chowder Blackmail.

Leon Buck, of 117 Canal street, testified that his uncle, Mr. Rosen, had sent back a chowder ticket to Max Hochstim because he could not afford to take it.

"Tell us about this chowder ticket," said Mr. Moss.
The witness begged to be let off. He said he was in the Comptroller's and had secured it by political influ

He explained that he had made application for another position under the city government, and he was afraid of losing this chance by testifying before the Senate Committee.

"Fifty cents; the rate established by law."

"Don't you get up bondsmen certificates for which you charge more?"

"Not now."

"Don't political organizations sometimes contract ahead for certificates?"

Mysteries of Naturalization. My Brown said it was very easy for an applicant for naturalization papers to answer the questions required by the statute, because it was a formula that any one could learn without much coaching. Efforts to trip up each applicant the nerves renew the wave and survey usually unsucessfully, because they were taught their lesson too well.

He said he could speak a little German, and got off Italian and French now and them, and got along very well with applicants.

Senator Lexow asked if the applicants were not usually coached right in the Clerk's office, but Brown declared this was never allowed, and that no favor was shown to any particular applicants, because they happened to be recommended by certain political workers or organizations.

"Supposing you refuse an applicant, does that end it?" asked Mr. Goff.

"Yes, so far as our court is concerned. They might go over to the other court and slide in there," replied the witness.

The clerks asked questions of applicants simply to facilitate the work of the Court. The law did not require them to ask any questions. No record of these questions were made, however, and the judge of the Court conducted his examination of the applicant entirely independent of them.

Thomas Boese, Chief Clerk of the Naturalization Bureau of the Superior Court, said that he should think 250 persons were made citizens by that court yesterded. The number every day now exceeded 250 a day.
